Bridgwater Town Council

BLAKE MUSEUM CELEBRATES IT'S 90TH BIRTHDAY THIS YEAR.

The Mayor, Alderman Walter Deacon, speaking at the opening of the Museum, 15 April 1926.

The museum was opened by Col M. Locke-Blake, a co-lateral descendent of Admiral Robert Blake, 1599-1657, on 15 April, 1926, and was owned by the Borough Council. The first Curators, Gerald Cuzner, followed by Angus Dunn, were also the Borough Librarians. The early displays largely concentrated on Admiral Blake and the Battle of Sedgemoor. Over the years the Museum expanded to include a cottage, adjoining the Mill.

In 1974, the Museum became the responsibility of Sedgemoor District Council, and was managed by John St John Earl and then Nick Nicholson, with assistance from volunteers of the Museum Society. Later, the District Council appointed Museum Officers – Sarah Harbige, succeeded by Jessica Vale.

The Town Mill, at the end of Blake Street, was acquired through the efforts of the Bridgwater Museum Association Trust, with the aim of expanding the Museum into it, but the Mill was damaged by fire in 1995, and the plans came to nothing.

The Mill mid-20th century

The Friends of Blake Museum began in March 2000, with the aim of supporting the museum practically and financially.

In 2007 the District Council announced that funding for the museum would cease in March 2008. After protracted negotiations it was handed over to the Town Council, in 2009, which now funds it, and from then on the Friends have run the museum guided by the honorary curators, helped by the Museum Mentor, Liz Neathey, of the South West Heritage Trust.

An ambitious programme of refurbishment, under the direction of the late Dr. Peter Cattermole, began in 2009 (with funding in part contributed in the first four years by the District Council and topped up by the Town Council) and has continued during annual winter shut-downs ever since, so the Museum has been completely overhauled. It has been re-decorated and re-wired throughout. Most galleries have modern display cases with low-energy LED lighting. The Museum is fully networked with computer access in most rooms. The gardens have been transformed. Several displays are changed annually.

The Museum Friends

Some hundred Friends and volunteers are involved, ranging from front of house custodians, welcoming visitors and running the shop, to cataloguing objects, cleaning, gardening, painting and decorating, electrical work, a learning team, web-site management, display design, fund-raising and business management. Overall control is in the hands of the Museum Sub-Committee of the Town Council.

The Friends donate several thousand pounds a year to the Museum towards running costs, raised by membership fees, coffee mornings, two fairs, a series of winter book sales and teas sold at the summer band concerts in Blake Gardens.
